

Keynote Speaker Dr. Katy Barber at the 2010 OCSS Spring Conference

Journey on the Columbia River: Past, Present and Future

Saturday, April 10, 2010

Rainier Jr./Sr. High School, Rainier, OR

Katy Barber is an associate professor of history at Portland State University where she has worked since 2001. She teaches Pacific Northwest and Western U.S. history, as well as public history courses. She is also on the Native American Studies faculty. She is the director of the Center for Columbia River History,

(www.ccrh.org) a public history consortium that includes PSU, Washington State University Vancouver and the Washington State Historical Society. She is the author of Death of Celilo Falls (University of Washington Press, 2005) and co-author of Nature's Northwest: The North Pacific Slope in the Twentieth Century (University of Arizona Press, forthcoming), as well as numerous articles. She left her home town of Portland, Oregon for graduate studies at Washington State University where she earned a doctorate in American Studies in 1999.